To Profit of

EASTER FAITH AND HISTORY by Daniel P. Fuller. Grand Rapids, Wm. B. Eerdmans

present the Hielical vieweint, one feels that his armunat world in The relation between faith and history has long occupied the attention of scholars. scied for the better by axxantidexonion including other considerat EXXXIVE The Dean of Fuller Theological Seminary traces this debate as it Wisheaces , Clanalitalite centers on the resurrection of Christ in this doctor's dissertation which he AMERICANE Submitted to the University of Basel. It begins with Lessing (18th century) who believed that the basis for the Christian faith did not depend on the facts of history; it moves through various representatives of 19th century liberalism; it continues in 20th century dialectical theology and concludes with Pannenberg's recent affirmation that revelation is mediated only through historical The views of events. * No less than 25 men are examined in detail with references to many others which makes this book a helpful compendium of religious points of view since the 18th century. These explanations are then tested against Luke's answer to the tension between faith and history as seen in his writings. Fuller feels that the purpose of Acts was to shounkingkx emphasise the preaching to Gentiles in order to force a Theophilus to conclude that this Gentile mission could be accounted for only if Christ arose from the dead. The disciples could know of Christ's resurrection from empirical evidence; Theophilus, through a process of reasoning backwards from the Gentile mission to the resurrection; and ordinary people ganxknawx (who are not trained historians) can know by the infallible proof of a changed life (like Barnabas's). Thus "faith is possible for every man who is confronted with a Barnabas. . . . Such a system of thought does keep Christianity as an historical religion . . . But such a system does not make all men dependent upon a priesthood of theologians who can follow historical reasoning to know that Jesus rose from the dead" (pp. 240-1). This seems clear until the author adds in a footnote that "the Bible functions as a Barnabas" which may bring us right back to faith dependent upon historical revelation. Nevertheless, hand to The the majority it is the confrontation with a Barnabas (i.e., a changed life) has brought mask to faith in Christ.

While the author has chosen to confine himself to Luke in order to present the Biblical viewpoint, one feels that his argument would have been considerations affected for the better by exemptions are including other considerations.

Like a study of 1 Corinthians 15, especially the phrase "according to the Scriptures," Romans 10:9, 17, andthe place of the regenerating work of the Holy Spirit.

the facts of Misobry; it soves through various representatives of 10th contury

Miberalism; it continues in 20th century dislectical theology and compludes with

Famicabergys recent affirmation that revelection is mediated only through Mistorical

The wiews of Events, whisherhands no loss than 25 men are exhained in detail with references to many others thich were this book a delecti compendium of religious points of view affice the liken century. These exhibitions are then tested analogs bulkers named to the tension between faith and alstory as mean in als arteings.

C.C.Ryrie

Fuller feels that the purpose of Acts was to showed with enclasted the preaching to dentiles in order to force a Theophilus to conclude that this dentile dission could be accounted for ball if Carist arose from the dend. The disciples could know of Carist's resurrection from empirical evidence: Theophilus, shrough a process of reasoning backbards from the entile mission to the resurrection; and ordinary applie taxonames (who are not frained distortions) can know by his infallible proof of a changed life (like barnabasts). Thus wished is possible for every man are is confronted with a barnabasts). Thus wished is possible for every man that is confronted with a barnabasts. . . Such a system of thought does keep that standard was an appropriate that them a prioritation of the oldier who seems clear until make all can dependent upon a prioritie dend" (pp. 240-1). This seems clear until responding to know that desse rose from the dend" (pp. 240-1). This seems clear until meaning us right and a fabthose that "the nine sunctions as a samabast which may the duct of affect the first whom a part of the fourtiers as a samabast which may has defined as a samabast which may has defined as a samabast which has defined as a samabast which may has defined as a samabast which may has defined as a samabast which has a samabast which ha

the confrontation with a harmabas (i.e., a changed life) has brought mass to faith